One day, Washington, sending a dispatch, Used by-the City Post Office. directed the bearer to cross the river at a certain ferry, and go through the Ramapo Pass to Morristown. The young man, knowing that a nest of traitors invested the pass, venthat another road would be the safest. "I shall be taken," he said, "if I go through the pass." "Young man, your duty is not to talk, but to obey," said Washington sternly. He went as directed, and near the pass was captured, as he was afraid of being, and sent to New York, then in the hands of the enemy. The next day, the dispatches taken from him. disclosing a plan of attacking the city, were published with great parade, and the English nmediately began preparations to defend it. This gave Washington time to plan and execute another movement in quite a different direction, and by that time both the British and the bearer found out that the dispatch was meant to be taken.
